Multinational companies, including those based in emerging markets, have become increasingly reliant on aggressive tax avoidance practices to boost short-term earnings, yet disclosure requirements have not kept pace with this changing world. As governments around the globe struggle with growing budget deficits and debt burdens, tax authorities are increasingly cracking down on these practices, which can have a significant impact on creditworthiness and shareholder value. Experts will discuss growing financial and reputational risks, global trends and policy responses to the issue of aggressive tax avoidance.
