Our planet can't wait. #climateweeknyc

Statement from Lisa Jackson, Apple's Vice President for Environment, Policy and Social Initiatives:

Addressing the urgent threat of climate change is a key priority across our operations. It's why we achieved carbon neutrality for our own operations in 2020, and have committed to being carbon neutral for our manufacturing and product use by 2030. Businesses also have a responsibility to use their voices to help advance strong policies to address climate change. We take this responsibility seriously, which is why we have voiced our support for the U.S. remaining committed to the goals of the Paris Climate Agreement, the enactment of a Clean Energy Standard (CES) that would decarbonize the power sector by 2035, and for mandatory disclosure of scope 1, 2 and 3 emissions to investors.

We must enact strong energy and climate policies that quickly decarbonize our electric grid, unleash innovation, bring new clean energy jobs to the economy and ensure that the United States retains its leadership role. These issues are critical and call for urgent action.

CEO Climate Dialogue Statement on Reconciliation Discussions
Washington, DC- In response to reports that carbon pricing is under active consideration in the reconciliation discussions happening on Capitol

Businesses are deeply concerned about the immediate and long-term impacts of climate change. We strongly support the climate provisions currently outlined in the Build Back Better Act.

Climate-based provisions will not only make domestic decarbonization more cost-effective for all Americans, they will also create millions of good jobs and encourage more ambition by other nations at COP26, inspiring more aggressive action around the world.

Businesses are trusted brands for millions of consumers. We are committed to leading the global economy toward one that is compatible with a stable climate. We are taking bold steps to transform our industries, but without these investments, it will be more difficult — and expensive — for our businesses and the US to achieve our climate goals.

Climate action includes investments that are critical to initiate a decade of transforming our clean energy economy. These climate provisions represent the far-reaching investments needed to tackle the climate crisis, addressing both sources and sinks of carbon. We are taking bold steps to transform our industries, but without these investments, it will be more difficult — and expensive — for our businesses and the US to achieve our climate goals.
